

SPIRITUAL COMMITMENT FOR SEVENTH-DAY EDUCATORS: Attach your response with the application.

God has entrusted all believers with this responsibility: “to preach the gospel to every creature” (Mark 16:15). For this cause, God has given us specific spiritual gifts and ministries. As educators, we employ many of these gifts—from faith to knowledge and from exhortation to love. Of these, Paul singles out one gift, love, as the greatest (1 Cor 12:9). These gifts are to benefit the whole church, the body of Christ. The reason God has endowed us with these gifts, “no matter what [the gift] may be, is to enable the possessor to witness” (27 Fundamental Adventist Beliefs, “Spiritual Gifts and Ministries”).

As educators, we assume a leading role as primary witnesses to Christ. For this reason—because we represent Christ in a leadership role—our actions, both public and private, our expressed beliefs and opinions, our lifestyle, and our personal relationship with Jesus Christ, must be harmonious with Christ’s teachings and the fundamental beliefs of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Our personal life is glued to the lessons we teach, and as mentors, discrepancies between our lifestyle and the lessons we teach will dilute any positive influence we have over the students. This speaks of unity among followers of Christ, not of uniformity. We are each blessed with unique qualities and as we work and share together, we present a more complete picture of Jesus.

Christian leaders must adhere to higher moral standards—not because we believe that strict obedience is necessary to earn salvation, but because any community holds leaders to higher standards. Our actions affect not only ourselves, but the image of Christ and the Seventh-day Adventist Church. In the Old Testament, Levites, the tribe assigned to be priests in the temple, were expected to follow strict lifestyle guidelines. 1 Timothy 3 makes distinctions between the lifestyles of church overseers, deacons, and the congregation. Paul addresses this power of influence in Romans 14. He says that we are in the service of God and not ourselves, and that we should not do anything which might cause another to stumble (verse 21).

Your relationship with Jesus will help you develop the strength and experience necessary to relate with students and treat them as Christ would. It will strengthen your judgment in making decisions, bring balance to life and help you deal with the problems in this life. Spiritual disciplines, such as prayer, meditation and Bible study will be fundamental in that relationship. Christ is the only one powerful enough to change lives, and only through His grace are we able to live a happy life. While we recognize that we are human and will make mistakes, the expectation is that you be genuine in your commitment to living as a disciple of Christ and as a Seventh-day Adventist.

PLEASE RESPOND: Take some time to think about the ways in which you will use your spiritual gifts, witness Christ’s love to your students, and uphold a position of strong, moral leadership in your classroom. Consider carefully the ideas presented here, and write a
